Admissions is a documentary that delves into the inherent contradictions and psychological implications of undocumented students trapped at the intersection of education policy and a broken immigration system. The stories of four students demonstrate both the dehumanizing effects of marginalization and their determination to receive a higher education. Their poignant narratives are expressed using experimental sound design, unsynchronized imagery, and metaphorical language.

It was voted best film by the American Educational Research Association this year. For more information on the film, please visit www.admissionsdocumentary.com/

A discussion with one of the filmmakers and one of the students featured in the documentary will follow the screening.

Refreshments will be served. Free admission.
